ON TREND: THE PART-TIME WALL?

For a long time, open living was on the crest of the interior design wave: seamless architecture saw dedicated spaces for cooking, eating, relaxing, sleeping and bathing merge into one. But desires change: when digital technology makes people available around the clock, they crave privacy. This is exactly what raumplus' sliding-door and partitioning systems provide. They are ahead of the game and offer the new "must haves" of interior design.

Eye-catcher: the sliding-door system S1500 with a powder-coated white frame, satin glass and glazing bars lets glances through but keeps kitchen odours and noise out of the living area when cooking is in full swing.

"For over 30 years, we've been constantly on-trend," chuckles Uta Bergmann when asked about current developments in interior design. Worldwide, the Bremen-based family-owned business raumplus is synonymous with sliding doors, room partitions and cupboard systems and widely represented on all continents. The high-end brand is at the forefront of an architectural trend away from completely open interiors and towards temporarily screening-off individual living areas. With a wealth of technical and optical variants, everything is hand-crafted in Germany.

raumplus systems create extremely flexible havens of privacy without compromising the spatial and communicative advantages of open living: a sliding door keeps a great deal of cooking vapours, odours and sounds out of neighbouring living spaces; a sliding shelf-cabinet shields the office niche from the sights and sounds of the living room, making it easy to concentrate even when the television is on; glazed partition between the bedroom and bathroom guarantees discretion in sanitary areas – to name just three possible scenarios. They aren't limited to domestic use, creating rooms within rooms for discretion in open-plan offices, doctors' practices, agencies and lawyers' offices.

At the same time, the creative possibilities are as varied as the use scenarios: door panels in matt or clear glass, various wood and lacquered surfaces in all colour tones of the RAL scale are surrounded by silver-coloured, bronze-coloured or powder-coated aluminium frames. Materials can be mixed and matched with glazing bars, handles etc. Those who wish to make their company CI, or a special photo, centre of attention can create a custom door panel with a digital print.

raumplus' Bremen-based team offers tailored solutions for every configuration and every space, even those with slanted ceilings, using the latest technology with comprehensive know-how and precision craftsmanship. Those seeking inspiration to enhance the privacy of their interior in a tasteful fashion will find what they are looking for in the catalogue "Smart Sliding and More" or online at www.raumplus.de. Here, they can see various examples of flexible transitions between a spacious open house and the relaxation that can be found in separate, private spaces with the help of sliding doors and partitions. As modern paravents, they deliver privacy while being bang on trend – just like raumplus itself.
