NATURAL DRAMA

Nature is the director here. In the starring roles: Flora, Fauna & the heavens surrounding the guest house located near Seattle. In the best seats in the house: The visitors to this haven. Transparent raumplus partition wall and sliding door systems give them the feeling of being at the heart of things instead of just watching from the side lines. For every new production from sunrise to full moon. Da capo!

Friends and acquaintances can experience Nature up close when staying with the hosts near Seattle. Quite literally, since the couple had a “friends’ residence” built in the grounds of their home combining full-on Nature with every conceivable comfort. The result is, however, very understated since the overriding design priority was “transparency”. Floor to ceiling windows provide direct views of the natural surroundings outside from anywhere in the house at any time of the day.

This, however, means that the room walls must also be see-through. They are thus only solid where the building's statics make it necessary. All other access points, for example from the bedroom to the bathroom and from these to the central hallway, were fitted with made-to-measure raumplus partitioning wall and sliding door systems. Safety glass panels made it possible to fulfil the brief and also provided the client with a clear base for an individually applied matt all over design. The motif, which is reminiscent of organic structures, perfectly complements the natural materials used in the house, ranging from light woods to natural stone floor coverings, and fits as harmoniously into the overall look as do the raumplus frames and guiding tracks in matt aluminium, which fit seamlessly into the floor. All elements of the minutely planned guest house were selected to coordinate with each other and made to measure using CAD, with tolerances of just a few millimetres. During the work one person was always available on site to provide guidance: Sören Bertelsen, director of the raumplus North America branch office. The result of the close collaboration is a truly remarkable "friends' residence" which writes its own personal Nature story all year round.

Dreamlike: Truth be told, the view is too beautiful to shut your eyes. The windows and raumplus walls allow guests to look out in three directions from the bed.

Creative:

The raumplus partitioning wall in clear safety glass was the starting point for a bespoke matt pattern.

Open-air bathing:

Guests can relax in the outdoors while still being under cover. A raumplus glass door offers protection against drafts from the hallway.
